

Do not discount power of prayer

I am writing to express my concern over a statement made in your editorial in the October issue of the Journal. I disagree with the categorical statement that “hand wringing, prayer, and expressions of concern don’t work.” In my opinion, any statement that one’s personal efforts in advocacy are more effective than another’s prayers indicates either a considerable degree of arrogance or a disbelief in the power of prayer. For instance, if there comes any improvement in access to health care in our state, I would not be the one to claim that it is a result of my efforts as president of the Wisconsin Medical Society any more than I would say that it is due to my prayers on the subject. The Journal should not publish statements minimizing the effect of prayer unless it is willing to publish testimonials as to the power of prayer and exhortations for readers to pray on matters related to health care access and quality.

It is my personal belief that both prayer and advocacy are urgently needed in our efforts to improve access to care and equity in quality.

Wisconsin Medical Journal

The mission of the Wisconsin Medical Journal is to provide a vehicle for professional communication and continuing education of Wisconsin physicians.

The Wisconsin Medical Journal (ISSN 1098-1861) is the official publication of the Wisconsin Medical Society and is devoted to the interests of the medical profession and health care in Wisconsin. The managing editor is responsible for overseeing the production, business operation and contents of Wisconsin Medical Journal. The editorial board, chaired by the medical editor, solicits and peer reviews all scientific articles; it does not screen public health, socioeconomic or organizational articles. Although letters to the editor are reviewed by the medical editor, all signed expressions of opinion belong to the author(s) for which neither the Wisconsin Medical Journal nor the Society take responsibility. The Wisconsin Medical Journal is indexed in Index Medicus, Hospital Literature Index and Cambridge Scientific Abstracts.
